DROP ALL CHARGES!
AGAINST VENEZUELA EMBASSY PROTECTORS

Embassy Protectors’ East Coast Tour

The four arrested Embassy Protectors — Kevin Zeese, Margaret Flowers, Adrienne Pine and David Paul — will be on an East Coast speaking and fundraising tour from January 24 to January 28, 2020. They are now facing trials on the trumped-up charge of “interfering with certain protective functions” of the government for their heroic effort to prevent the transfer of Venezuelan Embassy to a minority leader illegally appointed by the US government as President of Venezuela. This is a misdemeanor charge that carries a maximum of one-year imprisonment and $100,000 fine for each one of them.

In the most recent hearing, the judge denied them the right to have access to vital evidence for their defense. Judge Howell also referred to the Embassy Protectors as a "gang." Her actions will prevent the jury from hearing important context necessary to understand the case. This makes it difficult for the Protectors to defend themselves.

We are dealing with an urgent situation which requires massive public support — both financial and political — to push back the government’s effort to suppress any voice of dissent by making an example of the four embassy protectors.

They will be speaking at public forums in the following East Coast cities:
